Amy Dujon is bringing 18 years of outstanding leadership and instructional expertise to her new role at Learning Sciences International, where she helps schools and districts throughout the United States to implement research-based systems to foster school improvement and increase student achievement.

Passionate about student-centered education that readies learners for college and the global workplace, Dujon is relentless in her focus to grow professionally and personally, and believes that a growth mindset, risk taking, and success flow from the top down.

Before joining Learning Sciences International, Dujon was the principal of Acreage Pines Elementary School in Loxahatchee, Florida, where she led one of the first Demonstration Schools for Rigor initiatives. Details and data about the initiative are documented in this case study. Dujon has also served as a team instructional leader at the Area and Transformation, assistant principal, and high school teacher.

Dujon holds a bachelor's degree in drama education from Palm Beach Atlantic University, a master's in educational leadership from Nova Southeastern University, and is currently working on her doctorate.
